GERMANY

More than a decade on from the collapse of the Berlin Wall, Germany has yet to come up with the economic key to coping with its aftermath.

Once regarded as the economic giant of Europe, the German economy has fared much less well in the new millennium. Unemployment is high and growth is low.

The economy in the east remains particularly weak. Unemployment is double and economic output per head not much more than half of that in the west. The population is declining too as young people vote with their feet. Their talents go west with them. BBC News “Grenada became the focus of world attention in 1983, when a split in the governing left-wing party led to the overthrow and execution of the country's charismatic leader, Maurice Bishop, and provided the pretext for a US invasion of the islands.

Set against the background of Grenada's hitherto peaceful post-independence history, this event highlights the country's contradictory character.

From one angle, Grenada has an "exotic" flavour which appeals especially to Westerners. Known as the "Spice Island", it is the world's second-largest producer of nutmeg and is a significant producer of mace, cinnamon, ginger and cloves. It also boasts beautiful scenery, with picturesque and fertile valleys, rainforests, fast-flowing streams, hot springs, mountain lakes, a tropical climate and excellent beaches.” BBC News
